ABSTRACT

In 1992, survey data were gathered from 619 public and private community, technical, and junior college disability support service (DSS) personnel regarding DSS services and accommodations in those institutions during the 1991-92 academic year. Designed as a resource for administrators, counselors, students, parents, and policymakers, this report consists of a detailed state-by-state directory providing data on each of the 619 colleges responding to the survey. For each institution, 1991-92 data are provided on: (1) institution location and contact person; (2) total enrollment and DSS enrollment; (3) DSS graduates receiving associate degrees and certificates; (4) numbers of students registered in each of the DSS categories of visual impairment or blindness, deafness/hard of hearing, orthopedic/mobility disorders, speech/language disorders, learning disabilities, developmental disabilities, emotional/behavior disorders, head injuries, and chronic illness and other disabilities; (5) available support services and accommodations; special program features; and outcomes. The remaining sections of the report include a detailed table listing support services and accommodations by state; an index listing special DSS program features (e.g., assessment, and career counseling) and the institutions providing them; and an institutional index. Appendixes provide information on the Americans with Disability Act; list exemplary program award recipients; and review organizational resources. The survey instrument and a summary of the survey findings are included. (PAA)

★ PREFACE ★

The recent passage of the Americans with Disabilities Act has heightened national awareness of the potential for serving more fully our citizens with disabilities. The intent of this directory is to help provide a more comprehensive understanding of the role that community colleges play in providing training, education, and services for individuals with disabilities. Because approximately 683,000, or 67 percent, of all public higher education students with disabilities are enrolled in two-year colleges, these colleges play a particularly pivotal role in providing opportunities for developing the full potential of all individuals. This directory should serve as a resource for administrators, counselors, students, parents, and policymakers.

Funded with a grant from the U.S. Department of Education, Office of Special Education Programs, this directory is a revised and expanded version of a similar publication produced jointly in 1988 by the American Association of Community Colleges and the American Council on Education. Special appreciation is extended to Rhona Hartman, Director of the HEATH Resource Center at the American Council on Education, Washington, DC, and to Kathleen McLane, Director of Database Development at the Council for Exceptional Children, Reston, Virginia, for their advice on the design and content of the survey and database that form the backbone of the directory.

This publication would not have been possible without the cooperation of the presidents and staff of community colleges across the country who responded to the AACC survey of disability support services. We are grateful for their support.

AACC is maintaining a database of campus-based disability support service contacts. Any changes in contact names or the institutional descriptions reported in this directory can be forwarded to Lynn Barnett, Disabilities Project Director, AACC, One Dupont Circle, Suite 410, Washington, DC 20036 (FAX 202/833-2467).

★ INTRODUCTION ★

BACKGROUND

This directory was compiled in response to a need for more specific information about services to community college students with disabilities. It expands and updates a previous directory published in 1988 by the American Council on Education and the American Association of Community Colleges. The data reported here were gathered in the spring and summer of 1992 from 619 public and private community, technical, and junior college disability support service (DSS) personnel who responded to an AACC survey regarding DSS services and accommodations in those institutions during the 1991-1992 academic year. Responses applied to both full-time and part-time students.

The survey solicited information related to DSS contacts, enrollment, number of students registered for DSS, degree or certificate attainment, types of disabilities represented by students who request services, services and accommodations offered to those students, special features or programs that the college itself regarded as particularly successful, and student outcomes. The survey instrument appears in Appendix E.

HOW TO USE THIS DIRECTORY

Designed to give readers a picture of services provided nationwide by community colleges as a whole, as well as information on specific colleges, this directory is divided into four parts. Part I, "Institutions by State," provides a narrative description on each college that responded to the survey, including numbers of students registered for DSS services, a list of types of services and accommodations offered, and special features or programs. Part I should be useful to individuals who want to learn more about institutions already known to them. Part II, "Support Services/Accommodations by State," is presented in a spreadsheet format to allow readers to identify locations of specific services at a glance. Services, programs, or accommodations that are perceived to be especially noteworthy by the institutions themselves are categorized in Part III, "Special Features Index." The information indexed in this section has not been evaluated or ranked by AACC, and not all responding colleges reported a special feature. Part IV, "Institutional Index," is an alphabetical listing of the 619 institutions that completed the survey and are described in Part I of the directory.

All of the colleges listed offer catalogs, brochures, or other information that can be used by parents, students, and others to help them in their college selection process. For answers to questions about programs at a specific college, readers are encouraged to call or write the DSS contact person listed for that college in Part I of this directory.

The following sections outline the content of the survey and findings that have emerged from the data.

THE SURVEY INSTRUMENT

The survey instrument, developed in coordination with experts in the field, requested information in six main areas: institution and contact person; enrollment and graduation; students registered for disability support services; available support services and accommodations; special features; and outcomes. Information was requested based on the 1991-92 academic year. The categories of disabilities surveyed were as follows: visual impairment or blindness; deafness/hard of hearing; orthopedic/mobility disorders; speech/language disorders; learning disabilities; developmental disabilities; emotional/behavior disorders; head injuries; and chronic illness and other disabilities. The 25 specific support services and accommodations about which information was requested are shown below and in Part II.

Disability-specific scholarships
Disability support services office
Disability resource handbook
Special orientation
Registration assistance
Housing - on campus
Housing - off campus
Emergency evacuation
Transportation
Extracurricular campus activities
Adapted sports/physical education
Counseling (personal)
Disability-specific assessment
Adapted equipment (phones, computers, etc.)
Learning center lab
Interpreters
Notetakers/scribes/readers
Taped texts
Tutoring
Alternative exam formats/time
Course substitutions/waiver
Independent living/social skills training
Vocational assessment
Job-seeking skills training
Job placement

An attempt also was made to obtain follow-up DSS student data regarding education and work.

FINDINGS

Institutional contacts

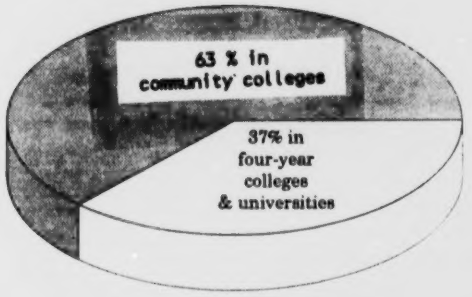
Approximately 70 percent of all institutions responding to the survey report having a formal Disability Support Service Office. Even so, a wide variety of types of professionals are listed as contacts for DSS information, ranging from registrars and institutional researchers to deans and vice presidents. More often counselors, coordinators, and directors of disability support service programs are the contact people. Their titles and departments include terms like student services, special needs, learning centers, disabled students, support services, and special populations.

Enrollment/graduation

Among all of postsecondary education, two-year colleges enroll the highest percentage of students with disabilities. The U.S. Department of Education's 1989-90 National Postsecondary Study Aid Survey (NPSAS) shows that 12.4 percent of public community college students report having a disability, compared with 7.1 percent in public four-year institutions and 8.6 percent in private four-year colleges and universities. (NPSAS numbers are not available for students in private community colleges or for non-credit or continuing education students.) If these percentages were applied to total enrollment numbers for public institutions in 1989, they would show that more than 1,087,000 students reports disabilities that year – or 9.7 percent of all students. In public community colleges, the total number of students who reported having a disability was 683,000; in public four-year colleges and universities, the total was 404,000. These statistics on enrollment in public higher education show that 63 percent of all students with disabilities are in community colleges, and 37 percent are in four-year colleges and universities.

Figure 1

Distribution of Students with Disabilities in Public Institutions of Higher Education

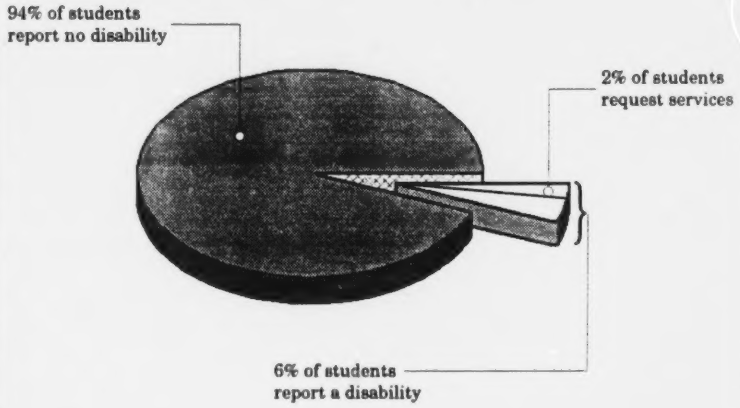


Sources: National Postsecondary Student Aid Study, 1989-90; also 1989 enrollment data from the National Center for Education Statistics and American Association of Community Colleges

The 1992 AACC survey, which reports data from colleges themselves as opposed to the NPSAS student-reported data, indicates that approximately 2.1 percent of all community college students register for disability support services. This figure is consistent with previous numbers cited by the HEATH Resource Center, the National Clearinghouse on Postsecondary Education for Individuals with Disabilities, a federally-funded program at the American Council on Education. Therefore, although nearly 6 percent of students report having a disability, only one-third of them seek special services or accommodations. It is likely that the needs of the other nearly 4 percent are being met by regular institutional programs or by the absence of physical barriers.

Figure 2

Percentage of Community College Students with Disabilities Requesting Services



Source: "Community College Services for Students with Disabilities," AACC Survey, 1992.

Responses to the 1992 AACC survey show that of the students registered for disability support services, only 6.8 percent attained an associate's degree and barely 0.2 percent earned a certificate during the 1991-92 academic year. However, more than one-third of the responding institutions did not provide data on degree/certificate attainment. This is likely to be an area that will receive greater attention in the future in the face of more public demand for educational accountability and subsequent calls for institutions to track outcomes for all students.

Students registered for disability support services

College staff were asked to report the categories of disabilities represented by their DSS students. If students fell into more than one category, the responses were to reflect the primary disability. Approximately 12 percent of all colleges responding did not keep DSS student data by category. However, among those 547 institutions reporting data, learning disabilities constituted by far the largest single category (about 34 percent) of disability served by a DSS office. It was followed by orthopedic or mobility disabilities (21 percent) and chronic illness/other disabilities (15 percent). Students in all other categories of disabilities were fairly evenly divided, with speech and language disorders representing the smallest number.

Support services and accommodations

Part II of the directory and figures 4 and 5 below illustrate responses to questions about the availability of 25 specific support services and types of accommodations offered on community college campuses. The 10 most prevalent are: registration assistance, counseling, alternative exam formats, notetaking services, learning center labs, DSS offices, adapted equipment, taped texts, tutoring, and job placement. Many of these services/accommodations appear to be responsive to needs resulting from learning disabilities.

The least prevalent services/accommodations include housing (on-campus and off-campus), independent living or social skills training, transportation, disability-specific scholarships, adaptive sports or physical education, disability resource handbook, emergency evacuation, extracurricular campus activities, and disability-specific assessment.

Special features

Colleges reported an array of programs or services that they felt were noteworthy and went above and beyond the requirements of Section 504 of the Rehabilitation Act of 1973 and the Americans with Disabilities Act. Among them are special innovations including using students in Court Reporter programs as notetakers, or using English-as-a-Second Language techniques with deaf students. Study abroad, housing, and internship programs are also cited. A number of colleges have well-established head-injury programs and various outreach initiatives to serve the community, including mentoring programs. These features are categorized in Part III.

Outcomes

A striking but not surprising finding is the absence of concrete data on what happens to students with disabilities once they leave the college. Few colleges are tracking students after they complete their studies. In fact, so few institutions appear to have solid information on DSS students' education or employment experiences after leaving the college that this type of information is not included in the directory.

SUMMARY

The implementation of the Americans with Disabilities Act has heightened public awareness of the importance of enabling all individuals, regardless of disability, to develop to their full potential. National statistics clearly show that community colleges are making a major contribution to this endeavor, and this survey has indicated where strengths and weaknesses exist. As traditional open access institutions with a mission to serve local communities, these colleges hold continued promise for reaching even larger numbers of people with disabilities. Although this survey provides new information about disability support services in community colleges, more needs to be known. Colleges need to be more aggressive in establishing processes for tracking students while they are in the college and for following them once they leave. Student outcomes and program evaluation are likely to be areas for future research. Another area of interest may be a comparison of services and accommodations in public and private institutions, in spite of current limitations in data acquisition at the federal level for private two-year colleges. This investigation is but the first of what should be a continuing series of studies.

"Disability on Campus: ADA Reaffirms Section 504"

by Rhona Hartman

Director, HEATH Resource Center

NOTE: This is a slightly edited version of an article that originally appeared in the August 17, 1992, issue of Higher Education & National Affairs. It appears here with the permission of the American Council on Education.

Students with disabilities are taking their places on American campuses in increasing numbers. It no longer is unusual to see someone moving about in a wheelchair, striding along with the aid of a white cane or guide dog, or conversing with friends in sign language. At many postsecondary institutions, students with disabilities are considered a vital part of the diversity they promote.

Almost one in 11 full-time, first-time freshman enrolled in college in 1991 reported they had a disability, up from one in 38 in 1978. However, only a small portion of the students who report on surveys that they have disabilities actually request accommodations. Disability Support Service Providers (DSSP) on campuses report that 1 to 3 percent of enrolled students are likely to request services such as readers, interpreters, additional time to take exams or complete courses, or classes at accessible sites. Students with disabilities have become a significant minority on U.S. campuses for many reasons: improved educational preparation; enhanced technology; increased medical knowledge; raised expectations of families, advisors, and students themselves; and expanded support service programs. Underpinning all these reasons, however, are federal laws enacted in the mid-1970s. Most pertinent to colleges and universities are the regulations that implement Section 504 of the Rehabilitation Act of 1973, the law that prohibits recipients of federal funds from discriminating solely on the basis of handicap. The 504 Regs, as they are called in the field, were issued in the spring of 1977, after which institutions began to evaluate their campuses for physical and programmatic access required by law. Since that time the American Council on Education has sponsored the HEATH project to help college and university administrators understand postsecondary/disability issues, provide them with technical assistance, and inform them about ways to eliminate discrimination.

The provision of disability support services is reported to increase student retention and thereby increase campus cost effectiveness. Such programs, at a minimum, help students receive access to campus programs and facilities. In many cases, however, DSSPs also coordinate extensive advocacy and training workshops for faculty, administration, staff, and students to ensure that all policies and procedures are free from discriminatory practices.

The implementation of the Americans with Disabilities Act (ADA) in 1990 and the recent implementation of several of its titles [see Appendix B] has resulted in increased interest and questions about what the legislation means for colleges and universities. Because ADA is based on the regulations for Section 504, colleges and universities must continue to comply with 504. ADA, in effect, reaffirms the 504 Regs and extends the discrimination prohibition beyond the campus to businesses and organizations that do not receive federal funds. In addition, ADA requires the appointment of an ADA coordinator and the development of a self-evaluation and transition plan to itemize the steps to take for compliance. This legislation not only brings new attention to disability issues, but is expected to be enforced more rigorously than the 504 Regs.

The most important decision that college leaders can make with regard to disability issues is to embrace publicly the spirit of the laws and then designate a person, such as the DSSP, to be responsible for implementing the plans for compliance.

ADA is the culmination of more than a decade of activism among disability advocates and reflects strong public opinion that society will benefit economically if people with disabilities are assimilated into the work force. Such thinking might explain why so many colleges have worked hard over the last decade to enable qualified students with disabilities to participate fully in their educational and social programs.

APPENDIX B
Americans with Disabilities Act of 1990
P.L. 101-336

DEFINITION:

The ADA definition of an "individual with disabilities" is the same as the definition of a "handicapped person" in Section 504:

> "any person who (i) has a physical or mental impairment which substantially limits one or more major life activities, (ii) has a record of such an impairment, or (iii) is regarded as having such an impairment."

SUMMARY:

ADA makes it unlawful to discriminate against individuals with disabilities in employment, state and local government services, public accommodations, and telecommunications. ADA has four primary titles:

Title I: Employment

Employers with 15 or more employees may not discriminate against qualified individuals with disabilities and must reasonably accommodate the disabilities of qualified applicants or employees unless undue hardship would result. An undue hardship is an accommodation that would be unduly costly, extensive, or disruptive to an organization or would fundamentally alter the operation of the business. For employers of 15 to 24 persons, Title I goes into effect June 1994. It is enforced by the U.S. Equal Employment Opportunity Commission.

Title II: Public Services

State and local government may not discriminate against qualified individuals with disabilities in the provision of government services. New construction and alterations to existing facilities must be accessible. Existing facilities must meet program accessibility requirements consistent with Section 504. New buses and rail vehicles must be accessible. Title II is enforced by the U.S. Department of Justice and the U.S. Department of Transportation.

Title III: Public Accommodations

Public accommodations and private entities providing public services cannot discriminate against individuals with disabilities. Included are restaurants, hotels, theaters, stores, doctors' offices, parks, private schools, and day care centers. Physical barriers must be removed if readily achievable or alternative methods of providing services must be offered. New construction and alterations to existing construction must be accessible. New buses and other vehicles operated by private entities must be accessible or the system must provide service equivalent to that provided to the general public. New construction applies to buildings ready for occupancy by January 1993. Title III is enforced by the U.S. Department of Justice and the U.S. Department of Transportation.

Title IV: Telecommunications

Carriers of interstate wire or radio communications must provide telecommunications relay services 24 hours a day for individuals with hearing and speech impairments. Title IV goes into effect July 26, 1993, and is enforced by the Federal Communications Commission.

The ADA Audit, Transition Plan, and Policy Statement for Higher Education: Manual and Workbook

Published in collaboration with the Association of Community College Trustees (ACCT), this book focuses on the institutional self-evaluation that all public community colleges must conduct by January 26, 1992. It takes a college step by step through the process of preparing and conoducting an ADA Title II audit. It includes a checklist of hundreds of questions that enable an institution to do its own self-evaluation without expensive outside consultants. Separate sections cover audits of hiring, employment policies and practices, student programs and services, non-academic programs, and facilities. Available from AACC Publications, P.O. Box 1737, Salisbury, MD 21802 (410/546-0391). 1 copy: $75 for AACC and ACCT members ($100 for non-members); 5-10 copies: $50 members, $65 non-members; 11 or more copies: $40 members, $52 non-members. Postage included on domestic orders.

Association for Higher Education and Disability (AHEAD) (formerly AHSSPPE)

P.O. Box 21192
Columbus, OH 43221
614/488-4972 (V/TT)

This national non-profit organization of members from more than 600 institutions of higher education that promotes full participation of individuals with disabilities in college life. Information sharing is a key element of the goal to upgrade the quality of services available to students with disabilities. Membership benefits include annual conferences, a bimonthly newsletter, and a membership directory. AHEAD also sponsors special interest groups in the following areas: AIDS, Blindness/Visual Impairment, Canadian Programs, Career Planning/Placement, Community Colleges, Computers, Deafness/Hearing Impairment, Disability Studies, Head Injury, Historically Underrepresented Populations with Disabilities, Independent Colleges and Universities, Learning Disabilities, Psychological Disabilities, TRIO programs, and Women and Disability. Some of its resources include:

National Resume Database for Students with Disabilities

Service offered free to any student with a disability in a postsecondary institution that allows employers to find, recruit, and hire students based on their abilities. Students seeking full-time, part-time, summer, or co-op employment complete a standard form that is entered into a searchable software package targeted to employers. Supported by the Job Accommodation Network of America and other donations.

ADA Response Handbook: A Practical Guide for Service Providers

A new tool that gathers up-to-date information about ADA. Contains publicity resources for awareness activities: fact sheets for widespread distribution; posters for campus and community awareness; brochures describing ADA's impact on postsecondary education; copy of the Americans with Disabilities Act; strategies for ADA-related activities; selected bibliography of ADA resources ($35 for AHEAD members, $60 for nonmembers).

COMMUNITY COLLEGE SERVICES
FOR STUDENTS WITH DISABILITIES

AACJC is collecting current information on programs and resources for students with disabilities in order to provide a more comprehensive understanding of the role that community, technical, and junior colleges play in providing training, education, and services for these individuals. Results will be compiled in a Directory of Community College Services for Students with Disabilities, which will serve as a resource for counselors, administrators, students, parents, and policymakers.
